Alvarez remains one of boxing's biggest draws and became undisputed at super middleweight for the second time in May after outpointing IBF champion William Scull. Canelo's loss to Dimitri Bivol up at light heavyweight still hurts, but at his natural weight of 168lbs he has looked in great shape. Yet he never faced David Benavidez at 168lbs to leave many to wonder whether the 35-year-old knows his prodigious body shots and ring IQ are on the wane.

Crawford will provide that test. A four-division world champion like his opponent, Bud will make history in victory as the first man in the four-belt era to be undisputed at three different weights, having already completed the set at light welterweight and welterweight. Now 37, and sitting higher in most viewers' pound-for-pound list than Canelo, the highly skilled southpaw will have to throw off a year's worth of ringrust and put Canelo under pressure early. Remember, Crawford is moving up two weight divisions here.

Canelo will start as favorite, but Crawford is so skilled he'll cause anyone problems. Also, with Dana White and Turki Al-Sheikh offering a 'knock-out bonus' in the six figures, both may be encouraged to go for broke.
